Love, Bigamy and Murder.

[From the Worcester (Mass.) Spy, Nov. 16.] The most desperate, cold-blooded and shocking case of murder that has ever transpired in this county occurred in this city yesterday afternoon at the house of Mr. Edward Curtis, situated about three miles from the City Hall, on the old turnpike road to Clappville, and near Jamesville. The relations of the parties and the particulars of the horrible affair, gathered from eye-witnesses, and from a visit to the scene of the tragedy, are as follows:

The parties were James Shepard, a young man about twenty-five years of age, who has had for years a disreputable name in this vicinity, and his wife, aged about eighteen years. Her maiden name was Laura Wesson. Some three years ago, when she was only fifteen years of age, she was enticed away from her home with her parents in this city by Shepard, and a marriage ceremony was performed, but during the same day she was rescued from him and restored to her friends. He was arrested for polygamy, he having a wife at the time; but this last marriage was declared null and void. Some six months afterwards she went off with him again, and remained awhile, when they separated. They were afterwards married again, and again separated. His treatment to her was harsh and brutal, but in spite of it her infatuation was such that she would, at his solicitation, connect herself with him again after every separation.

Two weeks ago he was arrested for having forged the signature of her parents to a permit for her to be married, by which he obtained a the case came into the police court, she declared that she should persist in living with him, and abandoned her friends to go with him. The case was accordingly placed on file, and she went with him to live in Lowell. She was there but a few days when he got out of money and refused to support her longer, turning her out of the house. She came back to this city to her parents and declared that she would never go with him again. Shepard followed her here and endeavored to persuade her to live with him again, but she refused and reshort distance from the scene of the murder.

Yesterday morning she went to Mr. Curtis' house to assist in doing the housework. She had been there but a short time when Shepard came and had a conversation with her, endeavoring to persuade her to go away with him. She refused and he became angry. The wife of a son of Mr. Curtis living in the house had been confined the night previous, and her nurse came out of the sick room and reproved him for loud talking. He made abusive and threatening remarks and left, saying he was going to the city to cry his wife down in the papers.

He came to the city and purchased a small single-barrelled pistol and a quantity of cartridges, and while returning met an acquaintance, to whom he said he was going up to Curtis' to kill his wife; that he had just been after a pistol to do it with. He arrived at the house be tween two and three o'clock. In the yard he inquired of James, a son of Mr. Curtis, a young man, which room Laura was in, and was told she was in the kitchen washing dishes .-He then asked James to go in with him, and started towards the door. James followed slowly, and as he entered the door he heard Mrs. Shepard cry out, "Oh, don't, Jim," and saw her struggling with her husband, who had a pistol in his hand. Young Curtis seized him and tried to hold him, and in the struggle the pistol was discharged, doing no harm. Mrs. Shepard and Mrs. Greenwood, the nurse, then ran across the entry into the sick room.-Shepard followed, having reloaded his pistol. and was again seized by Curtis, and his second shot was ineffectual. Shepard then succeeded in forcing open the door of the sick room and entering, shutting it against Curtis, who then ran to call for his brother, who was near by .-As soon as Shepard entered the room he fired another ineffectual shot. Mrs. Shepard then threw herself upon the bed with the sick woman, and he fired two more shots at her. Mrs. Curtis, the sick woman, said, "Don't shoot me," to which Shepard replied, "Don't fret, I won't hurt you; but I am going to shoot Laura." His wife then got out of the room, and, as she crossed the entry towards the kitchen, he fired again, the bullet taking effect in her right temple, and she fell dead across the threshold. The two brothers came in just the threshold. The two brothers came in just the threshold. in season to see her fall and to see him go out at the front door. Shepard immediately took to the fields and woods, going in the direction of Cherry Valley, the spectators of his murderous work being too much excited and frightened to prevent it .-Information was sent at once to the police office, and City Marshal Drennan, with some six or eight officers, and Coroner J. Marcus Rice hurried to the spot, and arrived there about an hour after the deed was committed. The body was found lying where it fell, the

The officers were at once dispatched in different directions in search of the murderer. - For sale by Those who went to Cherry Valley soon got on his track, and followed him to several houses, stores and factories, at each of which places he told what he had done, and threatened the life of any officer who should attempt to arrest him. At the house of his sister, in the same village, he gave up his pistol and cartridges. On the arrival of the officers there she was not inclined to give information, and they were delayed in searching for him. They afterwards found that he had been gone only five minutes when they arrived.

At all the places where he stopped he bade his acquaintances good-bye, saying they would sale low. never see him again, that he would take his own life rather than be arrested. At one place he gave away his tobacco, saying he should have no further use for it. The officers followed him in the last of the should and for sale by AVERY & DAVIDSON, and fo where it is evident he took to the fields, going towards the water. By this time it was dark and impossible to continue the search, and the officers returned. The search is a search and the officers returned and for officers r officers returned. His conduct when last seen gives rise to suspicion that he meditated self-

WORCESTER, MASS, Nov. 18 .- Shepard, the wife murderer, was coptured in Canterjury, Conn, this morning. He was observed coming out of a barn, where he had slept, and was soon taken without any resistance. The officers are expected to reach this city this afternoon with their prisoner.
